WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

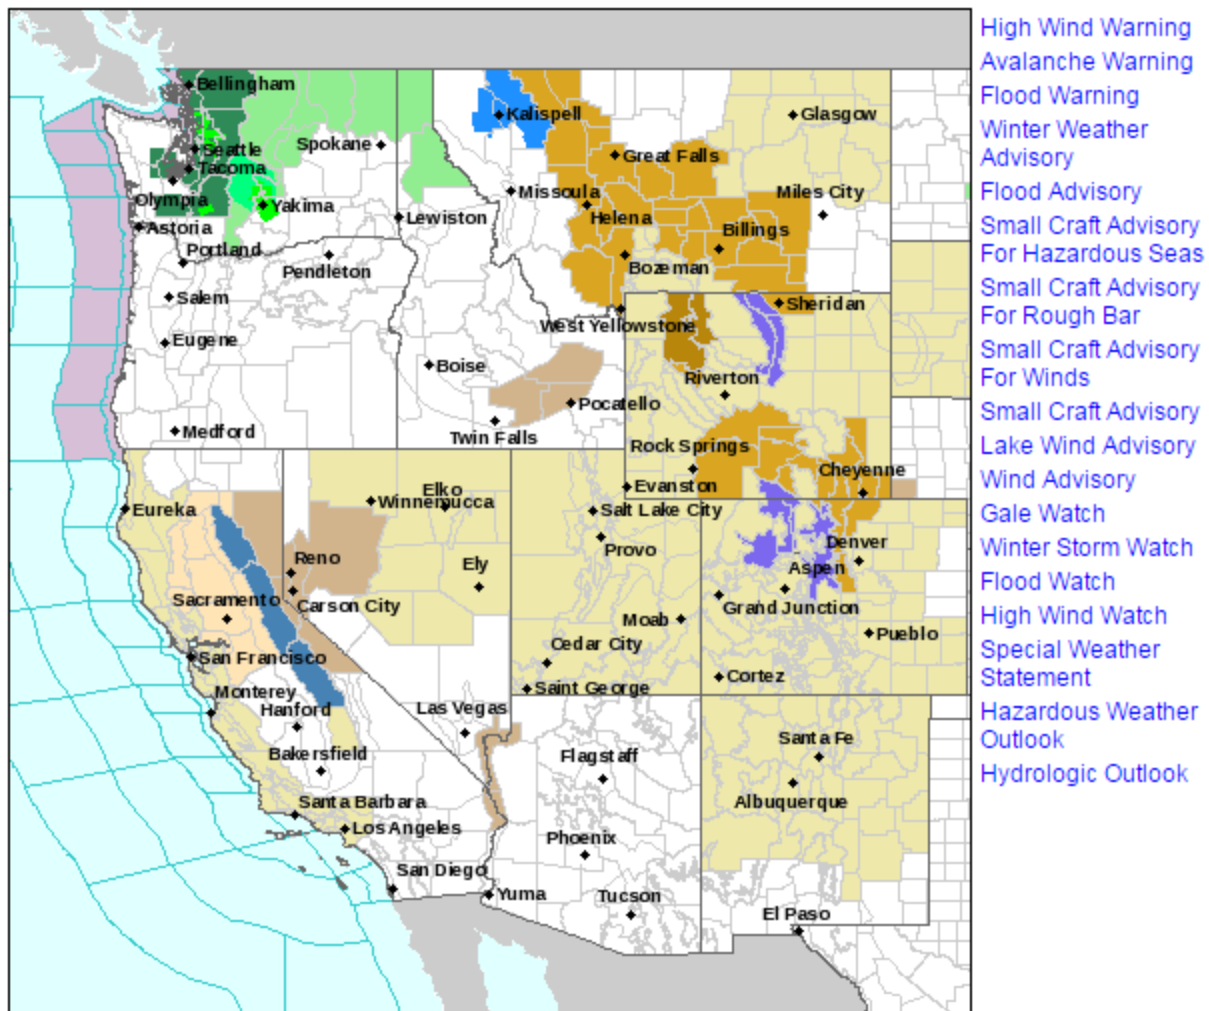

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Two frontal systems will bring a mix of winter weather to Northwest California this week. The first front will bring rain to the area beginning Wednesday with snow levels falling Wednesday night to near 3000 feet. Mountain snows are likely and some highway mountain passes may be impacted. In addition to the rain and snow, small hail and lightning will be possible in the stronger showers Wednesday night into early Thursday. Another front will move through the region on Friday bringing another round of rain and mountain snow. Some gusty south winds will also be possible Wednesday through Friday, but strong winds are currently not expected. Precipitation is expected to spread over interior Northern California by Wednesday afternoon with the heaviest precipitation occurring Wednesday night. A Winter Storm Watch has been posted for the southern Cascades and northern Sierra Nevada for the Wednesday/Thursday time period. Snowfall amounts of 1 to 2 feet are possible for elevations above 6000 feet. Travelers to the mountain areas should anticipate potential travel delays by Wednesday evening with chain controls becoming likely.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Gusty Santa Ana Winds will continue to gradually diminish across Southern California, however gusts between 30 and 40 mph can still be expected in the mountains of Ventura and Los Angeles Counties through Tuesday morning, with gusts between 25 and 35 mph in the coasts and valleys. Tuesday will likely bring another round of record heat to the region, with many coastal and valley areas climbing into the mid 80s to lower 90s. The combination of gusty offshore winds, very warm temperatures, and low humidities will continue to bring elevated fire danger through Tuesday. Many locations are forecast to either tie or break high temperature records.
